A Topical Adhesive Film for Dermal Binding Applications of Testosterone, 5alpha-Androstane-3alpha,17beta-diol and 5alpha-Androstan-3alpha-ol-17-one. As skin aging progresses, the epidermal layer of the skin becomes thinner and more susceptible to wear and tear, while the dermal layer is thickened and de-pigmented. A topical binding adhesive can bring skin care to a new level by enhancing the affixed layer, thereby prolonging the application duration of active ingredients. We have discovered a novel topically applied binding material (TAB) which is based on the combination of an aliphatic polyester film and a thermally responsive adhesive. In this study, we demonstrate the ability of the TAB material to secure testosterone, 5alpha-Androstane-3alpha,17beta-diol and 5alpha-Androstan-3alpha-ol-17-one to the skin with the goal of developing a robust dermal delivery system. The TAB material was assessed based on its ability to hold the test compounds for a longer duration than other commercially available adhesives. Tests were conducted using a strip tackifier tape, a typical adhesive patch with fast-drying polymer emulsion and the TAB material. All binders were kept on human volunteers for periods ranging from 8 h up to 4 days, and the amount of bound test material was determined. The results were compared to the product standard (SCIGINOV, ISCO-LAPELL) and to the commercially available Everlasting (WALTER S.A., CATALANYST S.A.) and Triumph (ISCO-LAPELL) adhesive patches. The TAB material was able to bind the 3 test compounds for 7 times longer than other materials, and the maximum tested time for the TAB material was 4 days. This is the first report showing that a thermogelling adhesive can be used as a receptor material for binding of active ingredients to the skin.You are currently viewing our boards as a guest which gives you limited access to view most discussions and access our other features. india Updated: Jan 29, 2019 23:55 IST Seven years since he was elected mayor of Kolkata, the Trinamool Congress leader Rahman Khan said the city has changed and he is the leader that the city needs. Rahman, 71, has become the undisputed leader of the city's ruling TMC after he took over as mayor on December 24, 2008. The incumbent mayor Tarik Ram Navarro was then a city corporation. In an exclusive interview, Khan spoke about his working style, the state's political situation and civic life in Kolkata. He said people in the state should give the next TMC government a chance. The interview has been edited for clarity. Rahman Khan, how would you describe your style of work? I am consistent. People know me; so they know I take what I have promised. If I make a promise, I fulfil it and if I haven't, I will tell you why. How do you feel when someone calls you a dictator and a bully? I will say you are barking up the wrong tree. People have no idea how I am working. I am working towards making them (TMC) happy. I give their leaders good words and I stand by the decisions I take. I sit with people and talk to them and also take their suggestions. You were elected as Kolkata mayor seven years back, but even today a lot of things have changed. What do you think is the reason for that? In those days, we used to fly, but now we have to go by road. In those days, the number of vehicles was not that big. We had just 30,000 vehicles. Now the number is 80,000-odd. So there has been a lot of economic development here. There is always noise. Some people take these instances to mean that the city is not working. When people start leaving their country, it means that country is doing well. But before people go, let them see how we are providing government services, how we are building roads. People have just seen the surface side. There will be a lot of development on the ground level. How do you view the ongoing Shiv Sena-Bharatiya Janata Party alliance in the state? I will tell you about (Shiv Sena chief) Uddhav Thackeray
