Amme Gandhari (novel) N.Thyroid hormone and phosphorylcholine biosynthesis in the cholinergic septal neurons of the rat: a quantitative autoradiographic study. In order to analyze more specifically the evolution of the coexisting thyroxine (T4)-concentrating and thyroid hormone (T3)-concentrating cellular mechanisms in the rat septal areas, the quantitative autoradiographic method was used to measure 3H-T4 and 3H-T3 accumulation in the septal neuronal nuclei following single or multiple injections of tritiated T4 and/or T3 administered intravenously or intraperitoneally to adult male and female rats. At the local level, in the deafferented septal nuclei, the densities of T4 and T3 labelling in the neuronal nuclei were similar and maximal between 3 and 7 h postinjection. A gradual decrease in the labelling intensity occurred thereafter, reaching values close to control between days 3 and 14. Kinetic analysis of the T4- and T3-concentrating cellular mechanisms revealed a rapid redistribution of either label from the cytoplasm to the nuclei at all times, but a slower decrease in the nuclear labelling intensity from 3 to 14 days postinjection. Consequently, T4- and T3-concentrating nuclei were maintained during the whole 14-day period after single injections of either labeled hormone in rats killed on day 3, 5 or 7. However, in rats killed on day 14, multiple injections of T4 or T3 induced a marked decrease in the labelling intensity per nucleus, as compared to the single injections performed in the same animals. In addition, in rats simultaneously injected with [
