The study, one of the largest ever undertaken in the U.S., concluded there are more than 96,000 "missing and abandoned" people in the nation. In order to identify those missing, Syracuse University researchers combed through a series of databases, including the National Incident-based Reporting System, which tracks crime statistics, the Bureau of Labor Statistics, which tracks employment, and the National Longitudinal Survey of Youth which tracks individuals who graduated from high school in 1980. The data showed that the average age for a missing person was 35 years old, and that men were more likely to be missing than women. More than 1,000,000 missing people were reported between 2009 and 2014. In 2014, the most reported cases were from Nevada (13,371), Florida (12,844) and Pennsylvania (12,831). The study also concluded that the risk of missing people increases with age. While the median age of a missing person was 35 years old, the chance of a missing person with that age was only 1.36 percent. The chance of a missing person with a younger age was much higher, with the median age of a missing person being 12 years old, which had a 1.99 percent chance of disappearance. One of the report's authors, Andrew Burstein, made the case in a recent MSNBC article that one of the major reasons these people are missing is a lack of government investment. "We are going to have to make a lot of changes in order to deal with this," he told MSNBC. "We are not investing in the healthcare system as much as we should be. We are not investing in the social services system as much as we should be." Despite the challenging economy, Burstein said the country should invest in helping its people because "losing a child is like losing a limb." Regular: $29.95 Sale: $22.95 Now: $22.95 (extra 30% off) Description Are you having a busy week? Let Kivi's It Never Rains Thread Spa Soap step in and take care of you on a day to day basis. This light-
