Dental caries prevalence and selected disease and risk factors in the Canadian province of Quebec. The objective of this study was to estimate the prevalence of caries experience in five year olds (five and six year old children) and 12 year olds (12 and 13 year old children) in the province of Quebec by province and by a combination of province and geographic region. Additionally, this study sought to determine the epidemiologic patterns of disease and risk factors in these age groups in Quebec. The weighted population of Quebec for the year 1996 was used to calculate the weighted figures of caries prevalence. In each of the age groups, the figure of caries prevalence was found to be significantly higher in the northern regions. The results suggest that the majority of these northern regions should be targeted for oral health promotion and prevention programs. The results also suggest that 13 year olds have the highest prevalence of caries in Quebec; in terms of a percentage of dental caries experience, the figure was 44.2% (males) and 45.7% (females) for 12 year old children; 46.9% (males) and 50.5% (females) for 13 year old children; and 59.7% (males) and 61.5% (females) for 15 year old children. The presence of dental plaque on teeth, especially in the anterior region of the mouth was the most important risk factor. Additional risk factors include higher consumption of sugar-containing foods, higher consumption of milk, and fluoridation of the water supply. Future research should continue to focus on the identification of additional factors which may contribute to the development of caries experience
